ILO Cataloguing in Publication Data

The designations employed in ILO publications, which are in conformity with United Nations practice, and the presentation of material therein do not imply the expression of any opinion whatsoever on the part of the International Labour Office concerning the legal status of any country, area or territory or of its authorities, or concerning the delimitation of its frontiers.

The responsibility for opinions expressed in signed articles, studies and other contributions rests solely with their authors, and publication does not constitute an endorsement by the International Labour Office of the opinions expressed in them.

Reference to names of firms and commercial products and processes does not imply their endorsement by the International Labour Office, and any failure to mention a particular firm, commercial product or process is not a sign of disapproval.

ILO publications can be obtained through major booksellers or ILO local offices in many countries, or direct from ILO Publications, International Labour Office, CH-1211 Geneva 22, Switzerland. Catalogues or lists of new publications are available free of charge from the above address, or by email: pubvente@ilo.org

Collection development

What is collection development?

Collection development is the term used for the systematic building of a library's collection. It is a permanent process of planning and deciding which documents you need to acquire or to keep. The principles of collection development are to meet the

- objectives and priorities of your organization
- needs of your users

In the simplest form, you should concentrate on building

- a complete collection of publications of your organisation
- a core collection of basic titles in labour information

By identifying the core resources, this guide can help you to develop your collection.

In order to develop your library's collection as effectively as possible, it is essential to have a clearly defined selection policy which sets criteria for deciding which publications to acquire. This selection policy should be developed in consultation with staff in your organization, and a good procedure is to prepare a very short (one or two pages) written document.

Government, trade union and employers' organization libraries will probably have different selection criteria.

For ideas in formulating your own selection criteria you can find it helpful to consult the selection policy for Labordoc the ILO's principal bibliographic database.

<http://www.ilo.org/public/english/support/lib/labordoc/selection.htm>

Selection policy

Selection needs to be an active process, not a passive one. A librarian's job is not simply to label and catalogue every book which happens to be received in the library. For example, it is important for the library to have a complete collection of its own organization's publications. This seems obvious, but the library is not always automatically included on the distribution list of its own institution. A passive approach on the part of the librarian could lead to serious gaps in the collection. All units in the organization that produce documents should be reminded that the library or information centre needs several (at least three) copies of any reports or any other materials which are produced.

An active selection policy means that every book or report is examined and a decision is made on whether it is suitable for the collection. This is obviously true for purchased material such as reference books, which may be expensive and certainly the subject of active, thoughtful selection. But active selection is just as important when selecting other categories of material, such as documents from other international organizations. A great deal of such material may be received without being requested, so that the temptation exists to simply process all the material received. This should be avoided, as some of it is likely to be irrelevant to the needs of the library, whereas other, more important material may be available only on request. It is important to remember that unneeded material takes up valuable space, and that no library material is free of cost: processing consumes time and equipment.

Criteria for selection

While the written selection policy is a valuable aid, the librarian should aim at developing his or her skill in selection beyond just applying a set of written criteria. Here are some ways for a librarian to become a good selector:

- know thoroughly the organization, its aims, work programme and constraints
- be thoroughly aware of the existence and activities of other organizations working in the same field and establish personal contacts with knowledgeable staff in these organizations
- learn the names of the organizations and companies which publish material of particular interest
- keep abreast of developments in the subjects of interest to the institution by reading newspapers and scanning specialist journals
- spend time reading book reviews and scanning bibliographies and announcements of new publications
- keep abreast of the needs and interests of the user community by going out and meeting the users and talking to them about their information needs

Selection routines

Providing access to relevant resources involves developing selection routines. The person responsible for selection should work in a methodical manner. These are some suggestions for routines that the selector may establish.

1. Establish profiles of interests (user profiles) for the staff of the institution, determining the specific subject interests of each. This can be done initially by using a questionnaire, or by conducting interviews. The profiles can be kept up to date through informal contact. The profiles can be kept in a small database, or a card file, arranged by subject and by staff member.
2. Establish a selection committee made up of representatives of each division of the institution, to review selection policy periodically and ensure that it continues to reflect the real information needs of the institution. It can also make decisions on non-routine purchases. This is a useful device for maintaining contact with the users and it is also a way of bringing the information service to the notice of the staff.
3. Review all material as it comes in, marking items of interest, and possibly contacting subject specialists for advice.
4. Receive or solicit requests directly from staff that have identified material they wish to acquire.
5. Make a decision about each item, taking into consideration:
 - selection policy (subject, type of material)
 - level (i.e. educational level at which the material is aimed)
 - language (can the users understand it?)
 - date of publication (is the information out of date?)
 - price (is it worth the money?)

- format (if it is non-book material, does the library have the equipment to read it / use it?)
- balance in the collection (i.e. prefer material covering areas where the collection is weak to material in areas already well covered by the collection)
- geographical scope (national, international, developing countries)
- credibility of author and publisher
- quality of binding (how durable is the item?)

6. Sort unsolicited material. Even when the material is free, only material that falls within the scope of the selection policy should be kept. Each item costs money to process and takes up space on the shelves. Material which is not appropriate for the collection should be given away or discarded. There are several possibilities for giving material away.

In some countries, the national library may willingly accept all unwanted library materials.

Some libraries prefer to give each item to an institution for which the item may be of interest, thereby creating good relations and possibilities of reciprocity.

Others place unwanted material on a table near the entrance to the library, with a sign inviting users to take away any material they can use.

Selecting Internet resources

More and more organizations, particularly those who operate on a not-for-profit basis, are making part of their publications available through the Internet. This can be a low cost and rapid way to obtain documents, if your Internet connection is good.

Search engines however only provide a hit and miss access to the most valuable resources. The librarian or information specialist can play an important role in selecting web sites which are useful for the staff of their institution. Since the Internet contains as much dubious information as useful sites, guidelines for the selection of electronic resources help to ensure the collection remains relevant and focused.

In addition to the criteria of relevance and scope, it is important to consider:

- Does the site come from an authoritative source?
- Is the author clearly identified?
- When the information was first produced?
- Is the site updated regularly?
- Is the site easy to use?
- Is it quick to load?
- Is there a text only option for users without graphics capability?

Is the Internet the best place to look for your topic? Remember that the bulk of the world's information is still not available on-line, and that the information that is on-line may not be the most reliable source. In many cases, more authoritative material may exist in your library's collection or in other print sources.

- Try using more than one search engine. Results can vary as search engines have different results and weaknesses.
- Read the Help screen to learn what each search engine covers and how to make the best use of its features. A couple of minutes spent on the help pages can save a lot of frustration.

Some Internet tutorials

Many tutorials available on-line deal with how to find, evaluate and select Web-based resources for use in a library. The following sites all give advice regarding information resources on the Internet, and they could be useful both for library staff and library users.

Finding Information on the Internet: A Tutorial

<http://www.lib.berkeley.edu/TeachingLib/Guides/Internet/FindInfo.html>

Presents a detailed and well-organized tutorial which offers excellent overview information for beginners. Specific search techniques are also available for those who are looking to improve their search results.

RDN Virtual Training Suite

<http://www.vts.rdn.ac.uk/>

A set of free online tutorials designed to help students, lecturers and researchers improve their Internet information literacy and IT skills through quizzes and interactive exercises to make the learning experience easier.

Academic Info - Internet Tutorials

<http://www.academicinfo.net/reffind.html>

Directory containing reliable links to academic resources on how to find information on the Internet, Internet tutorials, and a directory of online resources.

SOSIG (Social Science Information Gateway)

http://sosig.esrc.bris.ac.uk/training/virtual_training.html

Free online tutorials aimed to help you develop your research skills. All tutorials have been written by a subject specialist: university librarian or academic. They include quizzes and interactive exercises. Tutorials are designed for a wide range of professional activities and methods are adapted to each one.

Selected search engines

Google <http://www.google.com>

Very quick and relevant results. The largest and most up-to-date search engine at the time of publication of this guide.

Yahoo! <http://search.yahoo.com/>

The first large scale directory of the Internet, now a major portal offering search engine results.

Search Engine Colossus <http://www.searchenginecolossus.com>

Not a search engine, but an index of general and specific search engines from over 100 countries. Use this directory to locate an engine specialized in your country or region.

<http://laborsta.ilo.org/>

A major reference source for anyone interested in conditions of work and life, this trilingual survey provides detailed information on wages, hours of work and the price of food. Published yearly, the October Inquiry presents data on 159 occupations, 49 industry groups, and the retail prices of 93 food items - thus offering an indispensable statistical resource on the state of labour and employment in countries around the world.

Reference material

Encyclopaedia of Occupational Health and Safety Fourth Edition
ISBN 92-2-109203-8

Also available in French, Spanish and Russian.

Full text available on-line at <http://www.ilo.org/encyclopaedia>

It is presented in four volumes and provides comprehensive coverage of the core and allied fields encompassing occupational health and safety. It contains illustrations and indexes by subject, chemical name, and author. Also available in print or on CD-ROM; the CD-ROM version includes the same information as the print volumes plus a search and retrieval engine.

International Standard Classification of Occupations (ISCO-88) 1990
ISBN 92-2-106438-7

Available in English, French, and Spanish

<http://www.ilo.org/public/english/bureau/stat/publ/isco88.htm>

ISCO-88, the revised edition of a major ILO publication describes and presents information on occupations in a manner which makes international comparison possible. It can also serve as a model for developing or revising a national occupational classification. ISCO-88 has a hierarchical, four-layer structure, built on the basis of the type of work performed as reflected in the level, and in the specialization, of the skills needed to execute a job. A large number of countries use ISCO-88 as the basis for their national occupational classifications.

ILO Taxonomy

ISBN 92-2-018923-2; 978-92-2-018923-8 (web pdf)

<http://www.ilo.org/public/english/support/lib1/tools/taxonomy.pdf>

Trilingual: English, French, and Spanish

The ILO Taxonomy was designed by the ILO Library as a tool for retrieving information from the ILO website. Its structure therefore closely reflects the work programme of the ILO and is used by ILO departments and Field Offices for describing the content of their web pages and for searching the ILO website. It is also well suited for use as a subject classification system for arranging collections in small libraries or labour information centres.

ILO Thesaurus: Labour, employment and training terminology = Thesaurus BIT: terminologie du travail, de l'emploi et de la formation = Tesauro OIT : terminología de trabajo, empleo y de formación 6th 2005

Trilingual: English, French, and Spanish

<http://www.ilo.org/public/libdoc/ILO-Thesaurus/english/index.htm>

This tri-lingual thesaurus contains all the terminology used in indexing and retrieving information recorded in the ILO Library's Labordoc database, specialized information services of other ILO departments, and labour libraries from around the world. The thesaurus can serve as a guide for the physical arrangement of the library's collection, and is a good source of translations for labour-related terms.

ILO training material

The International Training Centre of the ILO in Turin publishes multimedia training material on subjects such as the training of entrepreneurs, administration of technical cooperation programmes, international labour standards, rural development, the role of women in development, workers education and more.

Their publications catalogue is available on-line on <http://www.itcilo.org/>. Orders for material can be addressed directly to the Turin centre or the ILO field offices.

Many ILO departments also publish teaching and training material. To find these documents, search in the Labordoc database, which gives bibliographic references for all ILO publications.

Also check the sites of other departments and programmes who indicate their teaching and training material. For example, see the publications catalogue of the Bureau for Workers' Activities <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/dialogue/actrav/publ/index.htm>.

The ILO Library provides several research tools and guides for libraries and labour information centres, available on-line and in print.

For help in identifying teaching and training material, contact the ILO Library at informs@ilo.org

Selection tools for ILO material

To identify new ILO publications to be added to your collection, you have several options. Consult the following to keep up to date with ILO publishing activities around the world.

How to obtain ILO material

Certain institutions active in the area of labour or social questions receive a selection of major ILO publications free of charge. This is the case for ILO constituents: governments, ministries, national and regional employers' organizations and trade union federations, national trade unions etc.

The list of publications sent to each institution is usually defined according to the particular needs of each one.

Types of publications sent include:

Monographs published alone or in series, International Labour Conference documents, sectoral meeting reports, training material, and periodicals.

- Material published by commercial publishers for the ILO is not distributed by the ILO.
- Specific regional studies are only sent to the region concerned.
- French language publications are not sent to English or Spanish speaking countries, and vice versa, except where there is a specific request to do so.

When your institution receives ILO material, it is important to regularly review the list of publications received. If certain types of publication are never used, you should eliminate them from the list. Also, please let the relevant ILO department know when your institution changes address or when staff members who receive free subscriptions leave or change position, so the subscription can be modified or cancelled.

When a member of your institution needs an ILO publication that you do not have, contact first your local ILO field office or depository library:

- Information centres of ILO field offices act as a centre for information on the ILO for their country or region. They have a representative collection of ILO publications. They do not however have a complete collection; this is the role of the Bureau of Library and Information Services in Geneva.
- Depository libraries receive a number of ILO publications. They may be able to provide access to certain material which you do not have, so it's a good idea to contact or visit your nearest depository library, to know which publications they receive and to develop collaboration.

To identify the nearest ILO information centre or depository library, consult the ILO Library's Directory of ILO Information around the world <http://www.ilo.org/dyn/depolib>

Otherwise, contact the ILO headquarters in Geneva:

- for a priced publication, ILO Publications, Fax : +41 22 799 6938 e-mail : pubvente@ilo.org

- for an unpriced publication, the department or programme concerned

- for an official publication, such as conference documents, the Official Relations service

Fax : +41 22 799 8944 e-mail : reloff@ilo.org

If an ILO publication is no longer available, contact the ILO Library, who will generally be able to provide the document by inter-library loan or a photocopy or electronic copy of the original. For help in identifying or obtaining copies of ILO documents, contact the ILO Library at informs@ilo.org

Material from other international organizations

Selection criteria

Selection criteria for publications from international organizations will follow your general selection policy. However there are some specific points to take into account:

- Documents should directly concern your country, neighbouring countries, countries with similar problems or your labour partners.
- The principle international statistical publications are an important source of information.
- Some subjects are particularly well represented in other libraries to which your users have easy access. For example, there could be a research centre on rural development, a UNDP office, or a United Nations Information Centre in your town or region. In that case, your institution's library need not cover in depth the same areas as these organizations.

If your library receives a donation of a large number of international publications, remember that you should only process those directly related to your institution's work - it takes up valuable time and space to treat all the material. There are several possibilities for giving material away (see Collection Development in this guide).

Selection tools

You can:

- Make contact with the regional representative of the United Nations and other organizations and ask to be put on the mailing list for the catalogues of new publications - you can also do this by directly contacting the publications department of each organization
- Consult the catalogues on the Web sites of international organizations. More and more often, unpublished documents such as working papers, reports etc. are available in full text on organizations' Web sites
- Encourage staff from your institution to bring back to the library any relevant documents from meetings, conferences or missions in which they take part

The following is a selection of some important international organization publications. The list is not exhaustive, but you can use this as a starting point for building a collection.

National and regional publications

Which publications to select?

The collection of publications produced in your country should have as a basis the core official publications which staff of your organization need for their job.

Here is a non-exhaustive list:

- Current national development plan
- Sectoral plan, for example for the labour force, rural activities, women, etc.
- Annual reports and economic bulletins from the central bank
- Annual reports from the different ministries and departments, for example those responsible for labour, planning, or the council for economic and social development, etc.
- Country yearbook
- Statistical yearbook
- Official gazette
- Labour Code, and reports on labour legislation
- Socio-economic reports and forecasts
- Publications from the main trade unions and employers' organizations

Selection tools

- Make the most of local information sources. This could be the announcement of a new book in the local press, publications lists from the main university in the region or a local bookshop.
- Universities and research centres often produce grey literature, such as theses or studies which could be a useful addition to your collection. Try to develop contacts and collaboration with those responsible, in the library or the publications department.
- Check the Recent Acquisitions list from other libraries in the region, such as the university library or the national library.

Use these sources with your selection policy in mind.

General reference works

Even the smallest library needs a collection of basic reference books. Just how many depends on your budget.

A basic collection includes:

- Good language dictionaries (English, French, Spanish and local languages)
- Atlas and maps
- A directory of training institutions in the country and/or region
- A directory of social institutions in the country and/or region
- Telephone directories

It is a good idea to prepare a short "waiting list" of reference books that you would like to acquire, so that you are ready when money becomes available.

Buying reference material should be weighed against the need for other types of material, particularly national material. Monographs which deal with labour problems in your country, published by commercial publishers, Economist Intelligence Reports and periodicals and all expensive documents may take priority over general reference works.

One of the factors to consider is whether reference works are easily available at another nearby library or via Internet.

Periodicals

Which periodicals to select?

Periodicals carry recent information and because of this they are a precious source of information.

The choice of periodicals will depend on the size and activity of your labour library or information centre.

You should make available for your users

- a small number of general periodicals, dealing with social or economic issues, to meet the need for current information
- periodicals specialized in the field of labour
- bulletins and newsletters from local employers' and workers' organizations
- periodical publications from the Labour Ministry

You can also select

- periodicals from certain international organizations
- publications by universities or private institutes, with a collection of articles by specialists and researchers.

See below a list of periodicals suggested by the ILO Library which can be searched for in Labordoc, the Library's catalogue.
